WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT COLLEGE STUDENTS, CORONAVIRUS, AND THE CENSUS

- The 2020 Census counts everyone in the United States, including college students. College students will be counted where they usually live, even if they are temporarily staying elsewhere while their school is closed because of COVID-19.
- Students who normally live at school should be counted at school, even if they are temporarily living somewhere else because of the COVID-19 pandemic.
- If you normally live in a dorm or college-owned Greek housing, don't worry — your college is already working with us to count you. That means you don't need to do anything — other than tell your parents not to include you in their response.
- Students who live in "Off-Campus Housing" - private housing that is not owned by a college or university should respond to the 2020 Census online, by phone, or by mail.
- if you normally live in an apartment or house, this is where you come in. You or one of your roommates will need to respond for everyone living at your school address.
